Dear Peru State Student,

I’m writing with an update about your campus courses. We don’t have all the answers yet, but are working hard to adapt courses so you can continue coursework remotely. This starts on Monday, March 23.

If you are in online courses, you’ll see no change to your courses. Be sure to keep up with your work and contact your instructors if you need assistance.

For those of you in campus courses, you will see changes in requirements, schedule, readings, and other aspects of your course. Your instructors will be in touch this week with details. Throughout this time, I will be communicating with your faculty and we will have staff reach out to help if you appear to be struggling in your courses.

For now, I’m asking you to do three things:

1. Determine how you’ll access the Internet for the foreseeable future. We know not all of you have easy access to the Internet at home, so consider local libraries or other sources. You can always come to campus for a few hours to complete work. Campus is open and the computer labs are all available for your use.
2. Be sure you can log in to Blackboard. See the link below with log in information. While not all faculty will use Blackboard, many of them will use this to communicate with you and provide course materials, including lectures.
3. Check your email regularly over the next few days and as we move forward. We will communicate important information to you.

Please visit https://www.peru.edu/academics/remotelearning to find additional tips and resources. We’ll be in touch throughout this week and in the next few weeks to make sure you are able to learn the important information for each of your courses.

Sincerely,
Dr. Tim Borchers
